Noodle Partners Works with Yeshiva University to Offer Online Degrees

Online program manager's adaptable business model, coupled with Katz’s and Cardozo’s excellent innovative programs, will enable YU to build their online presence

NEW YORK (PRWEB) February 07, 2019 -- Noodle Partners, the nation's fastest growing online program manager (OPM), will partner with Yeshiva University’s Katz School of Science and Health and Benjamin N. Cardozo School of Law to launch three online master’s degrees in Fall 2019: Data Analytics and Visualization, Digital Marketing and Media, and a new Master of Studies in Law.

“It’s a privilege to work closely with Yeshiva University, one of the most prestigious educational institutions in the country to help them expand and solidify their online course offerings,” said John Katzman, founder and CEO of Noodle Partners.

The centerpiece of Noodle Partners and YU’s partnership is the Convertible Revenue Share (CRS) model, an exclusive offering of Noodle Partners and a first in the online program management industry, which has traditionally been dominated by long-term, high-percentage revenue-share contracts. Instead of taking a percent of revenue Noodle Partners will fund the program and then charge small management fees once its initial investment is recouped via revenue share.

“We’re excited to work with Noodle Partners because they have the expertise and experience to help us deliver first-class programs while staying true to our identity and core academic values,” said Dr. Selma Botman, Provost and Vice President of Academic Affairs at Yeshiva University.
