Canton, GA (PRWEB) July 13, 2006 -- Women entrepreneurs must master more than just networking, developing and marketing products, communications and business strategy. Many must also learn how to deal with midlife overwhelm, as well as overcome physical and emotional challenges. The Women's Podcasting Expo, July 14-16, 2006 will offer a holistic set of online seminars for the many areas of a woman's life.

Women entrepreneurs are leading our generation in the creation of new businesses. Women will soon outnumber men in higher education, according to Fast Company, which in turn will result in more women in leadership positions. Women, however, want more than just success -- they want a fulfilling life, and they are willing to do whatever it takes to make that happen.

Take Jenn Wright, for example, of Midlife Heroine. Featured in Australia's Time Magazine and Australia's 60 Minutes, she represents the growing number of women who are moving into an exciting new phase of life without boundaries. She leads midlife women, virtually and physically, on a journey that results in the amazing realization that their lives have truly just begun.

Jenn is just one of the many speakers who will be teaching and encouraging women to expand their horizons both personally and in business at the Women's Podcasting Expo. She will present, "Midlife Overwhelm? Keys to Find Your Own Spirit of Adventure." Other non-business seminars include Breaking through Barriers, and What Would You Do If You Could Not Fail?

Glenda Watson Hyatt, of WebAccessibility.biz, and author of "I'll Do It Myself: A Collection of Memories from a Woman Living with Cerebral Palsy," is a successful entrepreneur who proves that physical challenges cannot limit you unless you allow them. She will be sharing in an online public round table discussion regarding Dealing with Physical Challenges. Joining her are other women who must overcome daily personal challenges, or who help their children face their own difficulties.
