Plastic Surgeons Publish Landmark Paper on Blepharoplasty Surgery

Internationally recognized plastic surgeons, Christopher Zoumalan MD and Jason Roostaeian MD, have just released their latest article on Blepharoplasty surgery in the recent publication of a major international plastic surgery journal, Plastic and Reconstructive Surgery®, the official medical journal of the American Society of Plastic Surgeons (ASPS).

Beverly Hills, California. (PRWEB) March 07, 2016 -- Internationally recognized plastic surgeons, Christopher Zoumalan MD and Jason Roostaeian MD, have just released their latest article on Blepharoplasty surgery in the recent publication of a major international plastic surgery journal, Plastic and Reconstructive Surgery®, the official medical journal of the American Society of Plastic Surgeons (ASPS). Dr. Zoumalan and Dr. Roostaeian, together have authored their article “Simplifying Blepharoplasty,” which describes the most up to date techniques in cosmetic eyelid surgery, a surgery which is also referred to as a blepharoplasty.

Dr. Zoumalan states that “when we wrote this article, our goal was to provide a publication that would provide plastic surgeons from around the world the latest knowledge about eyelid aging changes and how to best evaluate and treat patients that seek elective cosmetic eyelid surgery.” Dr Roostaeian also stressed that “we wanted to make this a very comprehensive article on blepharoplasty that would help better educate surgeons about the aging process and how to best achieve natural looking results with cosmetic eyelid surgery.”

Both authors emphasize that although there are various types of eyelid surgery techniques, their scientific article discusses various techniques while suggesting an algorithm that can help surgeons provide a safe and effective technique based on a patient’s individual clinical findings. Dr. Zoumalan, a private practice Oculoplastic Surgeon in Beverly Hills and also a Clinical Professor at the renowned Keck School of Medicine of USC, further states that “our publication is very unique such that we have designed a treatment algorithm to help novice surgeons and guide them toward a safe and effective surgical plan.” Dr Roostaeian, a teaching faculty member at the prestigious David Geffen School of Medicine at UCLA, emphasizes that “one of the goals of our algorithm was to provide surgeons in training with a framework for appropriate treatment of the aging eyelid.”
