The Effective Chinese Herbal Heart Formula For Heart Problems

An effective heart herbal formula helps people with coronary artery blockage, heart valve problems, irregular heartbeat and heart palpitations.

(PRWEB) March 29, 2005 -- HERBALmax® (www.herbal-max.com) introduces a Heart Formula. The formula is specially designed to improve functioning of the troubled heart. It can improve coronary artery blockage and the symptoms caused by heart valve and heart tissue problems, improve irregular heartbeat and heart palpitations, as well as other heart symptoms. It also helps to lower cholesterol and regulate blood lipid levels. Because it has no side effects, the Heart Formula is a great source for maintaining a healthy heart.

This unique formula contains a blend of Chinese herbs used for centuries for as a natural medication for heart problems. Many scientific studies conducted in China and elsewhere have documented the effectiveness of Salvia Miltiorrhiza and other herbs used in the Heart Formula:

The Heart Formula helps to:
1). Clean cholesterol and lipids from the coronary artery;
2). Promote artery dilatation leading to increased artery blood flow;
3). Improve cardiac contractility without increase myocardial oxygen consumption;
4). Improve cardiac function
5). Improve microcirculation;
6). Promote heart muscle tissue repair and regeneration;
7). Promote antithrombotic function to help stroke patient recovery.

Heart disease describes a variety of disorders and conditions that can affect the heart. The most common type of heart disease is coronary heart disease (CHD), also called coronary artery disease.

The word 'coronary' means crown, and it is the name given to the arteries that circle the heart like a crown. The coronary arteries supply the heart muscle with oxygen and nutrients.

Coronary heart disease develops when one or more of the coronary arteries that supply the blood to the heart become narrower than they used to be. Narrowing happens because of a buildup of cholesterol and other substances in the walls of the blood vessel, affecting the blood flow to the heart muscle.

Deposits of cholesterol and other fat-like substances can build up in the inner lining of these blood vessels, forming a bump in the blood vessel wall known as plaque. Plaque build-up narrows and hardens the blood vessel, a process called atherosclerosis, or hardening of the arteries. Eventually these plaque deposits can build up to significantly reduce or block blood flow to the heart.

Many people experience chest pain or discomfort from inadequate blood flow to the heart, especially during exercise when the heart needs more oxygen. Without an adequate blood supply, heart muscle tissue can be damaged.

Although we typically think of atherosclerosis as a disease of old age, the process begins as early as childhood, making prevention of coronary heart disease a priority for everyone.
It's not easy to tell if you have coronary heart disease, since the disease rarely causes symptoms in its early stages. That is why it's important to keep a healthy diet and healthy lifestyle. See your physician regularly; your physician can detect early warning signs of CHD, such as high blood pressure or high cholesterol levels.
