Follow the Yellow Brick Road to The Henry Ford for “The Wizard of Oz” Children’s Educational Exhibit, Opening October 1, 2011

Exhibit opens in Henry Ford Museum October 1, 2011 - January 9, 2012

Dearborn, MI (PRWEB) September 22, 2011 -- We’re off to see The Wizard of Oz, as The Henry Ford hosts The Wizard of Oz Children’s Educational Exhibit at Henry Ford Museum, Saturday, October 1, 2011 to Monday, January 9, 2012. Using the beloved movie classic as a guide, this interactive exhibit takes children and families over the rainbow on a fun, learning adventure that doesn’t require a tornado ride to get there!

Visitors will step into a child-size Land of Oz with stops at the Gale Farm, Munchkinland, The Crossroads, The Witch’s Castle and The Emerald City before heading back, because, of course, “there’s no place like home.”

Follow the movie’s storyline by first visiting Uncle Henry and Auntie Em’s farm. Take a seat on a hay bale to watch a movie about life on a typical farm. Next, explore the power of nature by creating a mini-tornado in Dorothy’s bedroom. Once the tornado settles, it’s onto Munchkinland to let your imagination run wild with funhouse mirrors, soft-sculpture rainbow blocks, musical tubes, a voice synthesizer and other fun activities.

On the Yellow Brick Road, meet Dorothy’s friends the Scarecrow, the Cowardly Lion and the Tin Man before heading to The Emerald City. Once there, create a “Horse of a Different Color,” play at the kaleidoscope and prism stations. At the Wicked Witch’s Castle, climb the mountain to capture the Wicked Witch’s broom from Winged Monkeys. Finally, click your heels three times while reciting “there’s no place like home,” to depart the Land of Oz.

In OZ-tober, every Saturday, visitors can come to the museum dressed as their favorite Wizard of Oz characters, participate in story time, hands-on demonstrations, make-and-take crafts and take a photo with a different character each weekend. In November, Henry Ford Museum will offer Munchkin luncheons, a special ticketed event in which children can meet their favorite Oz characters.
